The University of Mississippi strictly prohibits the alteration, falsification, or other misuse of a student’s documents or of University of Mississippi documents, records, or forms of identification, including registration forms and change of schedule forms. In addition, the University prohibits the misuse of state-issued identification (i.e., driver’s license), including the possession of fake or fictitious identification or the possession of valid identification belonging to someone other than the student.

In addition to the examples indicated above, fraud may include, but is not limited to, the following: furnishing false information to the University, forgery, unauthorized alteration of any official documentation, misuse of a University official’s signature, inappropriate use of a student identification card, misuse of information technology user id’s and/or passwords, misrepresenting or concealing one’s organizational affiliation(s) or sponsorship(s) for the purpose of enticing another person into joining or participating in a group or organization. Unauthorized use of the name of the University or the names of members or organizations in the University community is also considered fraud.
